Kathleen and Jeff Horizon silently express concern for their child's future at the Nuclear Freeze Festival, held Saturday at Santa Rosa Park.

Arms freeze initiative promoted by speeches

by Lorie Wertman
Staff Writer

With only 10 days left before the Nov. 2 election, supporters of Proposition 12, the Bilateral Nuclear Weapons Freeze Initiative, flocked to Santa Rosa Park Saturday for an afternoon of speeches and music.

A proliferation of anti-nuke and "Save the Humans" T-shirts clothed festival-goers. The crowd, already in support of Proposition 12, came to hear new arguments and philosophies from physicians, psychiatrists and clergy directed at the 36 percent who are still undecided on the freeze initiative.

Proposition 12 calls for both the United States and the Soviet Union to stop the testing, production and deployment of nuclear weapons in a way that can be checked and verified by both sides.

A street theater performance by the Action for Peace and Disarmament group got the Freeze Festival rolling with their rendition of the nuclear arms race. Hooded characters with corpse-like painted faces portrayed Americans and Russians wielding large rockets and pointed them at each other. In the middle, a skeletal-faced mother hovered over her infant trying to protect it. She cried out, "There are no Communist babies; there are no capitalist babies... a baby is a baby."

The actors said in a nuclear war there would be no place to hide, and that the fallout would poison the air, water, animals and all life even on the remotest parts of the planet. "If we're so brilliant that we know how to destroy ourselves, then we should be able to save ourselves," one actor said.

Recording artist Mary Macgregor performed several songs throughout the day, with overriding messages of peace. The song, "Holocaust," written by Dan Seals and John Ford Coley best exemplified the festival theme.

"The time has come when all of us have to give something for the all of us, and we can turn back the holocaust, and we can live and let live. Everywhere it seems very clear there's a reason why we all are here. We believe the world is one and we can live and let live."

Festival organizer Steve Brody of Psychologists for Social Responsibility said the time was ripe for a weapons freeze because the Americans and the Soviets are "basically balanced" in nuclear forces. By freezing now, "we could save what we do have," he said.

Brody said the U.S. now has a 30-minute attack warning time, but a new generation of weapons being developed "could strike their targets in six minutes." He said the growing stockpile of weapons on earth has the destructive capability of six thousand World War Twos. With our defense relying more heavily on computers, he feared the risk of computer error causing an accidental nuclear war.

"A key notion behind freezing," he said, "is to hold the number of nuclear arms where it is now" while negotiations drag on for arms reduction.

Faren Bachelis, county coordinator for the state-wide campaign in support of the freeze, said that a vote for Prop. 12 was a vote for human survival. The initiative qualified for the ballot because 750,000 Californians signed petitions to put it there.

Administration silent on discrimination charges

by Lori Marlett
Copy Editor

For the past two weeks, the Department of Labor has been on campus in an effort "to finish up the investigative process" concerning sex discrimination at Cal Poly, according to Smiley Wilkins, affirmative action coordinator.

The allegations were made three years ago by three female faculty members who claimed that sex discrimination existed at Cal Poly.

According to a Sept. 3, 1981 article in the Mustang Daily, as a result of a two-year investigation, the DOL found "that the university's policies and practices create an environment which is not conducive to the employment and advancement of female members of the faculty."

The results of that investigation listed former art and architecture lecturer, Joanne Ruggles, former psychology lecturer, Nell Langford, and Sharon Stine, a former lecturer in the Child Development Department, as the complainants.

Out of those three, Sharon Stine, is the only individual presently involved with the investigation, according to Wilkins, who declined to state if other faculty members were involved and why the other two faculty members are no longer part of the investigation.

During the interview, Wilkins declined to comment on any specific facts directly related to the case and in the presence of a DOL representative stated that the DOL would not be making any statements referring to the investigation.

According to Wilkins, an exit interview will take place this weekend between the Department of Labor and President Warren Baker, in which the DOL will present verbal recommendations. A written report will be followed up at a later date.

"The matter has laid dormant," said Wilkins, "and it needs to be resolved."

A decision of guilty or not guilty needs to be made so that Cal Poly can either make some changes or go on with its business, according to Wilkins.

The investigation taking place this week is a follow-up of the original review, he said.

The document issued Sept. 9, 1981 stated specifically, that women are "underutilized" in tenured positions of faculty, women are kept at the lecturer status on the average twice as long as men, "extremely rigid requirements" are used in promotion and hiring decisions involving women, and women have been "harrassed and retaliated against" for filing the complaint with the DOL.

Shuttle suspended for lack of riders

The San Luis Obispo Transportation temporarily suspended service of its Poly Shuttle Friday because of lack of riders.

Carole Harrison, spokeswoman for the transportation company, said the move was temporary and service would begin at the first sign of inclement weather. Because of this, the shuttle was scheduled to run Monday afternoon because of threatened rain.

Harrison said the company quit the service for a day earlier this year to determine if there was a need for it. At that time, she said, there were enough riders to warrant the continuance of the route. Lately, however, ridership has dropped, she said.

"There isn't any indication it's needed (on a regular basis)," Harrison said, "when you have a 45 passenger bus with three people on it."

Bill Doyle, ASI external affairs director said the shuttle, which he said services about 25 people a day, should continue despite the drop in ridership. "People expect the bus to come by at a certain time," he said. "Regardless if there are 25 riders or 250, it's going to inconvenience some people."

The suspension of the shuttle drops the number of SLO transit buses serving Cal Poly from four to two, said Doyle, a reduction of 47 percent in service.

Doyle said students should be encouraged to take the bus because of the savings in gas and car upkeep it provides. He said most are not aware of the special 25 cent token available to Cal Poly students because the university subsidizes the other half of student ridership fees. He also said three-rides-for-a-dollar passes are available to students who wish to ride the bus.

Harrison stressed that the move was temporary, and if ridership increases again the service would return. "If students use it, and we see a need for it, it will go back on again, but not for the few students who are using it," she said.

Poll shows students favor Russian

by Debbie Mitchell
Staff Writer

The results of a survey taken last week in the University Union Plaza by the Institute for Russian Language Studies showed many people favor adding the Russian foreign language to Cal Poly's regular curriculum.

"We were surprised at the good response," said Olga Howe, secretary/treasurer of the Institute. Howe said the question "Should the Russian language be instituted into the regular school curriculum?" yielded responses such as "Of course," "Sure," and "Fantastic!"

A total of 697 persons were polled in the three-day survey conducted by the Institute's founder and director, Kano Nguni. Eighty-seven percent favored adding Russian to the curriculum.

Of the 654 students polled, 572 thought that Russian should definitely be added to the Foreign language Department. Forty students considered it a "good idea" while 30 rejected the idea and 12 expressed "no opinion."

Of the 43 faculty and staff members polled, 35 responded that it should definitely be added to the curriculum, two thought it was a good idea, and two had "no opinion."

The course would not be a part of the general education requirements, Nguni clarified. "However, it would be an elective and the choice of a language besides what is now being taught at Cal Poly," he said. Presently, the

Kenny fires up

by Peter Hass
Staff Writer

The music fit the conditions inside the gym last Friday night: hot, with an occasional breeze to soothe the near-capacity crowd which had come to see Kenny Loggins work his magic with fiery passion.

Loggins gave his fans everything they could hope for at a concert; beautifully interpreted ballads, steamy rock and roll, and a few songs from his brand new release, High Adventure.

Following a short simple set of novelty and love songs by opening act Jack Tempchin, a songwriter who has collaborated with the Eagles and Glenn Frey, an animated Loggins sparked up the crowd with the pulsating "Love Has Come Of Age."

Having increased the volume level in the gym and, most likely, the crowd's heart rate, Loggins and his band settled down gradually, moving into

Loggins ignites crowd

"Whenever I Call You Friend," then a medley of Loggins and Messina hits.

The medley was the highlight of the evening. Loggins sat alone on stage with his acoustic guitar—and as gleeful as he seems during his more spirited numbers, he appeared happiest when performing the songs of his early career. Without a plea from Loggins, members of the crowd were singing with him on a slow-tempoed, bluesy rendition of "Your Mama Don't Dance."

It was just at this point, as if on cue, that a gentle breeze wafted through the heavy air, caused by the opening of the gym's back doors. The laid-back mood continued as Loggins interrupted his medley between "Watching The River Run" and "House at Pooh Corner" for "Only A Miracle," a ballad written after the birth of his first son, Loggins explained. The crowd was silent as Loggins sang his gratitude for his baby boy, backed beautifully by Neil Larsen's organ work.

The medley ended with "Danny's Song," another sing along favorite.

This mood continued through the first two encores, relenting only during an excruciatingly long guitar duel between lead guitarist Mike Hamilton and Loggins on "Lady Luck." During the exchange, most in attendance were seated, and likely were twiddling their thumbs.

The low point of the evening was quickly forgotten, however, as the crowd rose once more for "I'm Alright," and the encores "Don't Fight It" and "Keep The Fire." The band answered the cheers a second time by returning the Loggins' signature tune "Celebrate Me Home." Loggins seemed genuinely happy to oblige the crowd's request as he launched into the 15 minute finale.

At times during the more raucous numbers, Loggins was drowned out by his loud band, which was unfortunate. But ballads are his strongest suit, and through most of them, Loggins voice was loud and clear, basically unobstructed by instruments.

Maybe next time his should try an all-acoustic concert. Cool breezes are always refreshing.

Frankenstein lurks in Oceano

"Frankenstein — The Man Who Became God" is at the Great American Melodrama in Oceano in time for Halloween. The play began October 22 and plays through November 21st.

Adapted from Mary Shelley's Classic horror novel, the Melodrama production remains faithful to the original manuscript in telling the frightening tale of a man-made monster gone berserk.

Shelley wrote her story in 1816 at the age of nineteen as an entertainment for her lover, the poet Percy Bysshe Shelley, who she later married, and their friends while on an excursion to Switzerland.

Baron von Frankenstein is a young Swiss scientist daring to create life forms in his laboratory, but when the experiment goes awry, he rejects the mis-shapen creature he has brought to life.

The story of Frankenstein is the story of revenge—a crazed and hideous being intent on destroying all those responsible for his creation.

This powerful melodrama is followed by vaudeville show full of lighthearted nonsense.

Scheduled are a salute to Gershwin; excerpts from Jacques Brel; a lively tap dance revue; and the premier appearance of the Oceano Pops Orchestra.

Showtimes at the Melodrama are 7 p.m. on Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday; 8 p.m. Friday; and 5 p.m. or 8 p.m. on Saturday.

All ticket reservations are made through the Melodrama boxoffice on Highway One or by calling 489-2499. Tickets can be paid for at the boxoffice or at any Cheap Thrills record store.

Institute backs Russian

Foreign Language Department offers French, German, and Spanish.

The Institute for Russian Languages was formed this fall by Nguni to encourage the study of the Russian language and culture, said Howe. She added the Institute also wants to promote cultural exchange and to serve as a resource center.

Howe said the Institute feels Russian is a very important language due to the size and population of Russia, the technological developments which come from the country, and its political situation with the United States.

"Knowing a foreign language gives you an awareness of the other country," said Howe, "and if you know the other country's language, people, culture and history, it gives you control in situations." She cited political and economic situations as example.

Acting as adviser for the Institute is Robert F. Wambach, head of the Natural Resources Management department.

The survey results and a petition will be submitted to the Foreign Languages Department for consideration.

Prop. 12 supporters crowd freeze festival at park

Bachelis stressed the arms freeze would be a mutual agreement between the Soviets and the United States, and that both would agree to have the means to check on each other to verify if the other side was keeping their agreement. In answer to the charge that the Soviets are not to be trusted, she emphatically said, "Trust has nothing to do with it!" Dr. Dug Chisholm, who serves as county chairman of Physicians for Social Responsibility, said main military experts, including former CIA Director William Colby, have agreed that modern surveillance technology exists to verify Soviet violations of a freeze agreement. He referred to this month's Scientific American which spells out U. S. verification abilities.

According to the magazine, underground explosions set up "elastic vibrations that propagate as seismic waves through the earth." A network of seismometers can detect those vibrations, and even distinguish between the waves caused by earthquakes (S waves) and those caused by underground explosions (P waves).

George Albee, a psychologist who traveled from Vermont for the festival, was concerned over our inability to trust the Soviets. He quoted Karl Menninger in a Progressive magazine article as saying, "There is no good in us that is not also in them, and there is no evil in them that we are not also capable of."

Albee said we shouldn't stop with Proposition 12. He suggested we begin considering a massive exchange of peoples (young children, doctors and teachers) from the Soviet Union and the United States, "so we could learn about one another and understand each other better."

Steven Longfellow Fisk, a nationally active peace reformer and musician, sang several of his songs off the ASI album "Seeds of Peace." Fisk said most of our national songs were of "blood-letting" and "war mongering," and he called for a need to "affirm life instead of war." Fisk re-wrote the words to the national anthem, because "we don't need bombs bursting in air anymore," he said. Posters with his lyrics were passed out, as he engaged the crowd in a sing-along.

Rabbi Harry Manhoff of the Congregation of Beth David said the United States was first in military spending, yet fifteenth in literacy and eighteenth in life expectancy. He said that by voting for the arms freeze, we were supporting our basic human rights to life.

Another clergyman, Rev. Lyle Grosjean of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, said we were here to "take the first step towards taking charge of our lives," and that we no longer could expect "they" (politicians) to do it for us.

Former mayor of San Luis Obispo Ken Schwartz said we could directly influence national policy by voting for candidates who are going to support the immediate freeze. Schwartz cautioned not to just press the lever on election day, "but to continue to educate elected officials as to your viewpoints."

UU hosts awareness

A four-hour exercise in disabled awareness is scheduled to be held at Cal Poly from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today.

Titled, "Attitudes and Aptitudes," the 1982 Disabled Awareness Day is presented by Cal Poly's Disabled Students Unlimited and is designed to increase the sensitivity of the university community to the special needs and concerns of disabled persons.

The public is invited to participate, and admission is free.

During the four hours, the Plaza of the University Union will hold exhibits of devices and equipment used to ease the lives of the disabled. On display will be a Braille machine, wheelchairs, recreational equipment, and others.

In Mustang Lounge a free film festival will be held, featuring short movies about the disabled experience, addressing all manner of obvious and hidden disabilities.

Nurses from Cal Poly's Health Center will administer a free immunization clinic, offering initial shots and boosters for measles-mumps-Rubella, tetanus-Diphtheria and Rubella. This free service is for Cal Poly students, staff and faculty.

At 7 p.m., the SLO Motion Riders (the DSU team) will play wheelchair basketball against the Creaking Wheels. Set for the main gym, admission is 50 cents.

It's not headache time every game for Tom Gleason who scored 2 goals Friday against Bakersfield. Here he gets his head into a 3-1 win over Cal State Northridge.

Poly Athletes of the Week

It's like they've been there before

Deja vu. Yes, you have seen their names before as Poly Athletes of the Week. Uh huh, their mug shots, too. The situation is ripe to use something like, "The best only get better."

Steve Booker

But the Mustang Daily sports staff, in picking for the second time inside linebacker Steve Booker and womens' volleyball setter Tina Taylor, will simply let their stats say that. Booker, a senior accounting major, was a primary factor in sending Simon Fraser University home this weekend to British Columbia with not a point in its luggage, as the Mustangs trounced the Clansmen Saturday night, 34-0.

Tina Taylor

Taylor, meanwhile, had her own stopping monopoly going. As in, stopping top rival USC from winning Friday night and Cal State Fullerton from squeaking by Saturday night.

How? By being the most consistent player both nights.

On the season, the senior business major is 69 for 186 in kills, making errors in only 50 times in some 2,800 chances.

Congratulations to this week's Poly Athletes. The sports staff wonders—does deja vu strike more than twice?

4-0 blowout vs. Bakersfield

It's pointless facing Poly soccer

by Mark Gang
Staff Writer

You know you have it made when your opponent's coach confesses that he has trouble getting his players psyched up to play your team.

That's the way it has been all year for Cal State Bakersfield soccer coach, Dave Atkinson, whose Roadrunners have won just one game this season.

Friday night in Mustang Stadium it was just another blow-out for the Runners as Cal Poly scored an easy 4-0 win behind two Tom Gleason goals and singles by Curtis Apsey and Tom Moore.

Mustang coach Wolfgang Gartner had trouble getting excited about the win. "We obviously outplayed them. There was never any question that we were going to win." What else can a guy say after his team has outscored its opponent 17-0 the last four times they've met?

Well, he could always look down the road to tougher matches. Maybe that would get his team excited.

With four league games left, Poly is tied with Cal State Los Angeles for first in the CCAA. Since the Mustangs have beaten and tied the Golden Eagles, they would get the nod for the playoffs if the two are still tied at the end of the season. Thus, it becomes imperative that the Mustangs win all four of their remaining league matches and since two of those matches are against Dominguez Hills, the Toros will be the biggest obstacle in Poly's way to the playoffs.

Another obstacle Poly faces is the rollercoaster win-loss pattern they have established lately.

Check it out: Two weeks ago Poly beat Bakersfield (who else?) 6-0, then promptly lost 4-2 (the most goals they have given up this year), turned around the next day and won 4-0, then did another about-face and lost 3-0 and, of course, just won a lopsided match.

That means the Mustangs are on the upswing of their pattern. That also means a downswing is due in their next match. Fortunately, their next match is against St. Mary's this afternoon in Moraga. So, if Poly holds true to the trend, we should expect a loss against St. Mary's and a win against Dominguez Hills on Saturday.

Support Prop. 1

When Proposition 13 passed with a landslide in 1978, taxpayers rejoiced.

Property taxes in California had been rising by as much as 33 percent each year. Homeowners were being unfairly burdened with tax added upon tax on their property, to finance every conceivable state and local project. Many of the tax hikes were insidiously slipped in through loopholes without a public vote.

And so taxpayers—with the assistance of Howard Jarvis—revolted. Proposition 13 rolled back property values to 1975 appraisals, and limited annual increase to maximum of two percent.

But while taxpayers celebrated their "victory over bureaucracy," school districts grieved. Along with fire and police services, part of the price paid for the property tax decreases and limitations was that Proposition 13 prohibited local districts from levying additional property taxes—a former means of financing school construction and refurbishing.

California school districts report that their schools are in poor shape and badly need new and upgraded facilities. Many schools—particularly elementary schools in growing areas—are grossly overcrowded.

Locally, school district officials say Prop. 13 has had a "tremendous effect" on services provided for students. Lucia Mar Unified District, for example, has been unable to build badly needed classrooms and thus has an ever-increasing ratio of students to teachers. In San Luis Obispo Unified School District, $833,000 in building and grounds construction projects have been cancelled.

On Nov. 2, voters will be given the opportunity to help public schools. Proposition 1 would allow the state to issue $500 million in bonds to finance school construction. In addition, part of the funds would be used to pay for construction of school buildings which would be leased to the district with buying provisions.

This method of financing would remove school construction from the budget process, avoiding annual review, an aspect that opponents of the bill are quick to point out. But in fact this would be a plus; the need for construction is painfully obvious and needed as quickly as possible, and annual review would serve only to bog things down in bureaucratic red tape.

The Mustang Daily Editorial Board urges readers to vote yes on Proposition 1. The quality of education depends on quality facilities, and overcrowded schools inevitably mean some students are denied individual attention. Think of the future—vote yes on 1.

Letters

Inaccurate statistics

Editor:

In response to the Oct. 22 letter written by "Name Withheld By Request" who stated that 60 percent of San Francisco's population is homosexual, we, among many, feel that there has been injustice done to The City. This injustice is that "Name Withheld" blindly stated that 402,000 people (60 percent of the 670,000 San Franciscans) are homosexuals, leaving only 268,000 non-homosexuals. The only two major homosexual districts in San Francisco occupy only a small fraction of the city. How can more than half the population inhabit such a small area?

Injustices such as this are commonly shared by many cities across the country. How often have we heard the terms fog and cow dung applied to Bakersfield?

We ourselves are not homosexuals, but we are, however, second-generation natives of one of America's most fascinating and diverse cities. We agree with "Name Withheld's" point of view, but we would appreciate accurate statistics to support his or her opinion.

Editor:

Although the Earth is definitely capable of feeding all its human inhabitants from a biological point of view, hunger is a very serious problem in our world. While many people starve to death each day, others go to sleep badly malnourished, never able to leave behind the desperate feeling of hunger. Some don't even make it through their first few months of life.

As fellow human beings, we cannot, in good conscience, ignore this awful problem and just hope for it to go away. Although not very well understood in society, the problem is growing worse day by day, and to be dealt with, it needs the cooperation of us all.

The United States as a nation is estimated to be capable of feeding its own population six times. Even if we were to retain all this food, we would not need to have a bad conscience since direct food aid can be of help only on a temporary basis. The real problem that we may be causing is the actual import from already undernourished countries of such relatively luxurious items as pineapples, bananas, tomatoes, and beef. Because of the very high prices these items bring in on the U.S. market, local landowners neglect to grow commodities that are greatly more efficient and nutritious but less lucrative. Contrary to popular opinion, export commodities are not a good means of raising revenue for a developing country since the buying power of this revenue has steadily decreased over the last decade.

Interested students are encouraged to attend the meetings of the Campus Hunger Coalition on Wednesdays at 6p.m. in Architecture Room 226.

Use Escort Service

Editor:

The Escort Service is under way again this year except there is a problem — not enough students are utilizing it! Maybe all that you need is a little more information.

The service is manned by members of the Inter Fraternity Council and Tau Beta Pi. There is even a new phone number this year (jot it down in your phone books!) 546-1409. The guys will be more than happy to escort you anywhere on campus that you need to go from dusk to midnight every Sunday through Friday. There are two locations where an escort may be reached — The Library or the University Union.

A lot of you girls think that you don't need to have an escort — especially on campus. Well, you are wrong. I would think that after reading all the things that have been going on around here you would be standing in line by the dozens to use the escort service, but you don't. I know, you think that you feel silly, that you don't think anything will ever happen to you. Wouldn't it be a lot better to know that using the Escort Service would be better than taking a chance that something might happen?
